Stronger Than Steel: Some Good News for PenTeleData & the Communities We Serve

PenTeleData is proud to serve the Lehigh Valley! Did you know that the Lehigh Valley has more people, more money, and more diversity than in 1980 when the steel mills were still operating?

Lehigh Valley Live recently announced a new project that represents perhaps the loudest cheer lehighvalleylive.com has ever made as superfans of the region it serves. It's a series aptly named Stronger than Steel, an in-depth look at how the Lehigh Valley has made a remarkable comeback since Bethlehem Steel's blast furnaces went cold in 1995. Read about it at www.lehighvalleylive.com/strongerthansteel.

I'm often working on several projects at once. I've accidentally closed web browser tabs that I still needed and it's a hassle to find the information again, especially if it was something important and I'm in a hurry. How can I get that page back if I don't remember the source?

The Network Guy:

Accidentally closing out of a browser tab or window is common. Luckily, you can always refer to your menu for browser history or recently closed tabs. There's a much easier way though, and it's as simple as using the keyboard shortcut Ctrl+Shift+T for Windows users or Cmd+Shift+T for Mac users.

PenTeleData is Proud to Serve Stroudsburg, PA

Incorporated in 1815, Stroudsburg got its start as Fort Hamilton, one of a series of forts built by the Pennsylvania government. The town's location at the confluence of the Pocono, McMichaels, and Brodhead creeks made it suitable for gristmill and sawmill businesses. In 1836, Stroudsburg became the seat of the new Monroe County; it also became the county's leading market town. Lumber mills, tanneries, and textile mills contributed to the town's growth in the nineteenth century. Today, Stroudsburg's biggest industry is tourism.

Known for its proximity to the Poconos, Stroudsburg shines with a striking mix of historic allure and modern appeal. From shops to shows to seasonal festivals, its vibrant, walkable downtown has something for everyone. The town is home to museums and galleries, murals and music venues, wineries and restaurants. Stroudsburg has activities, art and flavors to please every palate. The birthplace of the J.J. Newberry department stores, the borough retains its beautiful, quintessential 19th century market town architecture, now housing exciting new shops and businesses to discover.
